

School Exclusions (Fixed Period)

ENFIELD

Information for Parents

My child has been excluded from school for a fixed period. What does this mean?

Your child's Headteacher will notify you immediately, often by telephone and then in writing that your child has been excluded for a fixed period. The letter will state the date when your child should return to school. Your child can be excluded for up to 45 days in a school year.

What happens during the exclusion?

Pupils who have been excluded must stay at home for the first 5 days. The school will provide work for your child and this should be completed and returned to the school. During the initial 5 days, you must ensure that your child is not present in a public place during school hours without reasonable justification. Parents will be subject to a prosecution or a fixed penalty notice if they fail to do this. This means no trips to the shops, the cinema or anywhere else that could be considered to be a public place. Your child must not go back to school or visit another school to meet friends. Your child is not allowed to enter the school premises during this time.

If the exclusion is for more than 5 school days, the School is responsible for providing your child with alternative suitable full-time education from the 6th school day of the exclusion and your child will be required to attend this provision. The provision could take place at another school.

For primary aged pupils, the Headteacher must arrange to meet with you to discuss your child's reintegration to school. This will take place either at the end or during the period of the exclusion.

For secondary aged pupils, the Headteacher must arrange a reintegration interview with parents during or following the end of a fixed period exclusion when it is six days or longer.

Do I have the right to look at my child's school records?

Yes. Under Regulation 6 and 7 of the Education (School Records) Regulation 1989, you have the right of access to the school's curricular records and other educational records for your child.

Your request for access to your child's records should be made to the Local Governing Board of the school. To do this you can write to the Headteacher or Chair of Governors at the school address.

What if my child is excluded for a fixed period and is due to sit exams during that time?

Arrangements will normally be made for your child to sit the exams. Please contact the school as soon as possible to discuss the matter.

What can I do if I disagree with my child's exclusion?

If you do not agree with the Headteacher's decision to exclude your child for a fixed period you have the right to make representation (i.e. make your case) to the Governors of the school. However, if the exclusion is for 5 school days or less, the Governors are not legally required to meet with you. If the exclusion is for more than 5 days (in total in any one term) or your child may miss a public exam, a meeting of the Governors will be set up to decide whether your child should be reinstated.

If you decide that you wish to put your case to the Local Governing Board you and your child will be invited to a meeting of the School Governors at which you will be able to state your case.

This meeting will be arranged as soon as practicable but in the case of short fixed period exclusions the pupil will often be back in school before the meeting can take place. If the meeting takes place after your child has gone back this will still give you an opportunity to put your views about the exclusion to the Governors.

In presenting your case you will need to show that your child has been dealt with unfairly, either because you disagree with the description of the offence(s) or that exclusion is too harsh a consequence for what happened. If you want to do so, you can bring someone with you (usually a friend, another family member, an interpreter or signer) to the meeting to help put your view or help keep a record of what happens.

Who will be at the meeting?

There will be representatives from the Local Governing Board, usually no more than three at the meeting. The Headteacher and sometimes other senior members of staff will also attend. Sometimes an education welfare officer, educational psychologist, social worker or officer from the education department will go to the meeting.

What happens at the meeting?

The Chair of the Governors' Panel will welcome you to the meeting, introduce everyone present and explain what will happen at the meeting and the exclusion procedure. The Headteacher, or other appropriate member of staff, will explain why your child was excluded. You will then be able to ask the Headteacher questions about his/her report and be able to put your own case. The Governors may then ask you or your child questions concerning either the Headteacher's report or matters you have raised. When the panel feel able to make a decision they will close the meeting and everyone will leave except the Governors. You will be notified, in writing, of the Governors' decision immediately following the meeting.
